Conductor: every Time We Switch A Train We Break Up A Car--And We Switch At Every Station, And Stations On This Line Are About Five Miles Apart. Up In The Northwest The Stations Were A Hundred Miles Apart Hence Less Switching And Fewer Damaged Cars. we have got to be careful to know the conditions as regards the number of switch engines. Conditions must be the same not only as regards the number of switch engines, but as regards the power. The tractive effort of the locomotive has a great deal to do with the abuse which can be given a car. It is necessary that the same conditions should prevail in the motive power of any two roads that are being compared in order to analyze the situation and discover anything that may be of value. Again we emphasize the fact that we cannot,...
