This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Master's Thesis from the year 2004 in the subject Politics - International Politics - General and Theories, printed single-sided, grade: 2,0 (B), University of Heidelberg (Institute for Political Science), course: International Cooperation and Organisations, 24 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: Introduction The emergence of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) in 1947 marked a substantial turning point in the American trade policy from protectionism to free trade. High tariff barriers and the absence of free trade were seen as one of the main reasons for the Great Depression in the 1920s. To prevent such international economic crisis in the future the United States of America pushed forward negotiations about international economic cooperation that led to the GATT. Until today the imitation of the GATT, the WTO, is together with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank the most important international economic cooperation. Cooperation between states only comes into being if certain requirements are fulfilled. The different theories of international relations aim to explain under which circumstances such international cooperation emerges. Thereby each...
