Excerpt: . . . on land for some length of time, and often make excursions in search of frogs or worms, of which they are very fond. There are supposed to be four kinds of English eels--the sharp-nosed, the broad-nosed, the snig, and the grig. No. 253. --THE SLY SILURUS. THIS is the largest of European fresh-water fish, and is very rare in England, but common in Germany, Sweden, and Norway. It is about six feet long, and it weighs from two to three hundredweight; a formidable fish indeed, as far as size goes. It hides itself in the mud, and is good to eat. No. 254. --THE PIKE, LUCE, OR JACK. Most fierce and voracious is the Pike. It varies in size from two or three pounds weight to fifteen or twenty, and has been known to grow to thirty-five pounds. Young ducklings, moor-hens, and even young...
