Chapter 3 Data Validation, Documentation, and Testing of Data Analysis GAO products rely on quality evidence and sound analysis to support the findings, conclusions, and recommendations. Therefore, data validation, documentation, and testing of data analysis are extremely important in ensuring quality products. This chapter discusses validating original data, validating data transferred between computers and software packages, documenting interactive work sessions, and documenting and testing data analysis procedures. Procedures discussed in this chapter apply to both dBASE interactive and programming modes. Government Auditing Standards requires checking the Data Validation validity of original data. In addition, it is good practice to establish checks to ensure the integrity of data when it is transferred between computers or different software packages. These checks generally include reasonableness checks, record counts, data totals, hash totals, and data verification. A reasonableness check is a common sense look at the data. For instance: Are amounts too...
